

HONDURAS TODAY

AN EYEWITNESS REPORT

ONE YEAR AFTER THE COUP

Honduran trade unionists meet to plan a general strike the government's against anti-labor laws (El Tiempo)

Since the elections of November 2009—boycotted as a sham by most of the public—the US and its allies have declared a “return to normalcy” in Honduras. But the situation is normal only insofar as the same people who overthrew the elected president in June 2009 remain in ultimate power. Under the new regime of Porfirio Lobo, the Honduran people have had to endure death squads targeting activist and journalists, military occupations of their land, and government attempts to ram through vicious anti-labor legislation—while the White House and State Department give their blessings.
